Fun little game to pass the time.. I bought this game excited about a full sandbox type of city builder and was thinking I might get something like the old school Sim City that I played back in the 90s on my Super Nintendo. .I was WRONG. Watch my full 30+ min review of this game right here: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DVVq8MK-aUM> There's no features available in the game for things like power, water, or sewage. There's no ability to rotate a building all four directions, they can only face the bottom right or the bottom left so you always see the front. There's no ability to make curved roads, and no mountains or hills to work your city around with the procedural generation. But my biggest complaint is that the progress of people moving into your city is WAY TOO SLOW, and there is NO OPTION TO SPEED UP THE GAME! Argh! I placed plenty of houses, plenty of services, and factories, offices and everything available to build. but people were still moving in at a mind numbingly slow pace. My first impressions of this game are "disappointing" as I just expected much more and much faster progression that what this game currently delivers. I cannot recommend it even with it's very low price tag. While Romopolis doesn't offer the open sandbox style of play which I generally prefer, it just offers a lot more fun and value at about the same price. My score is a 43%. Not recommended.. UPDATE 5/27/16: There have been some changes/fixes/enhancements, but I wanted to let the original review stand, so I'll mention the new stuff here. The Housing, Shops, Jobs, and Safety sliders now all work in the same manner and it's much more intuitive (no more confusion over when to build shops!) This was the one confusing point I had with the interface originally, but now that's been fixed. In addition, the mousewheel zooming is more intuitive (up to zoom in, down to zoom out), and there is now a proper exit game button. The dev has been kind and collaborative with players, and has asked for and considered (and in some cases, then implemented) player suggestions. Compared to most games on Steam, this is a game with a smaller scope, and a smaller price point, so having this kind of dev response to game issues is really refreshing. PREVIOUS REVIEW: This game is cute and relaxing. I have to admit the negative reviews put me off, but I kept being drawn in by the screenshots and the videos. So, I decided to buy it and make my own decision. If it simply didn't work, I could get a refund. I'm not going to refund. I've had a blast playing this game. As soon as I figured out how to manage the "Build Shops" meter, it's been very entertaining to place my colorful little isometric buildings and watch my city grow. Basically, build housing. Build industry to gather materials. Build offices or factories for jobs. Then, when people start moving in (build a LOT of housing. that's the only way the population will start to really grow), your Build Shops meter will move. Build ONE shop, and give it about 15 minutes to let it get supplied with materials and then it'll start generating cash for you. Then, just build more when the meter moves to the right. Beautify your city with parks and playgrounds, and make sure things are safe by placing your fire station and police station. The larger your population gets, the more shops and different kinds of housing open up. I enjoyed SimCity back in the day, but it was a little micromanagey for me what with the power grid and water pumps and zoning, etc. This little game is truly pick up and play, and you don't have to invest a lot of time into every session. but I can't help that I have. :) I'm not going to say everyone else's negative reviews are wrong, but I sincerely don't understand what they were expecting. except for that one reviewer who was somehow expecting power and sewage and curved roads. all for under $4. Wut. I love the game for what it is, but then. I have reasonable expectations. UPDATE: Just hit 250 population and I got my first disaster! I about jumped out of my skin, because up until now, things have been calm and quiet and peaceful. I started hearing traffic noise, which was cool. and then crash! Looked like a traffic accident with the yellow triangle. Luckily, I had not one, but TWO hospitals at this point, and a little icon appeared on the hospital so I figured I'd try to click it. Well, the accident was cleared up with some pretty cool sound effects and I got some gold coins out of it. :) UPDATE 2: Just hit 400+ population and my cops just busted a car thief! :D I've also had one apartment fire and one office fire. I built schools and schoolbuses are now driving around town with the cop cars and the fire trucks and the ambulances.. First, create the first game off The Terminal 2. Maybe that I then want to buy your new game. or do you just like at The Terminal 2 ignore your players. do you make this game 100% ready now? or do you leave this also lay back. do not trust the creator of the game. the game itself is a fun, and can be something beautiful. but there is still some work in and this is the problem. as the previous game still not finished and never.. All I can say even if this was free it would cost to much its is super crap. This game is more of a puzzle game than a city builder - which is fine, just not the style of game that I am interested in. I would recommend it to people that like casual games with simple strategic elements. It's more about putting the pieces together than crafting a creative and thoughtful city.. I really like this game. Its chill to play. And there is no action in this game, what is very good.. This game is awful, this game is a unfinished mobile game. - Build times are in REAL TIME.. It's a cute game but plopping down roads is a bit out of date. It would be cool if you can click and drag a road. Production and building takes more time then needs to be in a game like this. For the price you pay, it a fun way to pass the time. (So you get what you pay for.)
